A love affair with the automobile

Australians love their cars and the aftermarket helps them love their cars even more! Australia's automotive aftermarket delivers products that make the motoring experience easier, more pleasurable or more productive and make the vehicle more functional.

At a retail level, the aftermarket is estimated to be $8.1 billion AUD. It serves nearly 12 million passenger vehicles. Vehicle owners fall into all customer segments – the enthusiast do-it-yourself through to the time poor do-it-for me.

Before reaching the retail customer, aftermarket product passes through a complex distribution network

Major players in the retail sector include Repco, Supercheap Auto, the Automotive Brands group, Auto One and Bursons. These businesses have over 1,600 retail and trade outlets in all states and Territories of Australia and New Zealand.

The Australian automotive aftermarket is:

- :: An $8 billion retail market
- :: An alternative source of innovation and design
- :: A source of quality manufactured products

A great source of quality product

Australia is a source of aftermarket innovation and design. All of the design skills required to translate your idea into a tangible product are available in Australia. The world's auto makers and auto parts suppliers use these skills. Three auto makers – Toyota, General Motors and Ford – have design centres based in Australia that utilise and enhance the talents of Australia's engineers.

Using these skills, Australia's automotive aftermarket manufacturers produce product for the global market. From 4x4 accessories to driving lights to high performance & motorsport parts, these manufacturers design and deliver product to markets as diverse as North Asia, the United States, Europe and the Middle East. Many supply their product to Australia's passenger motor vehicle manufacturers for original equipment fitment.

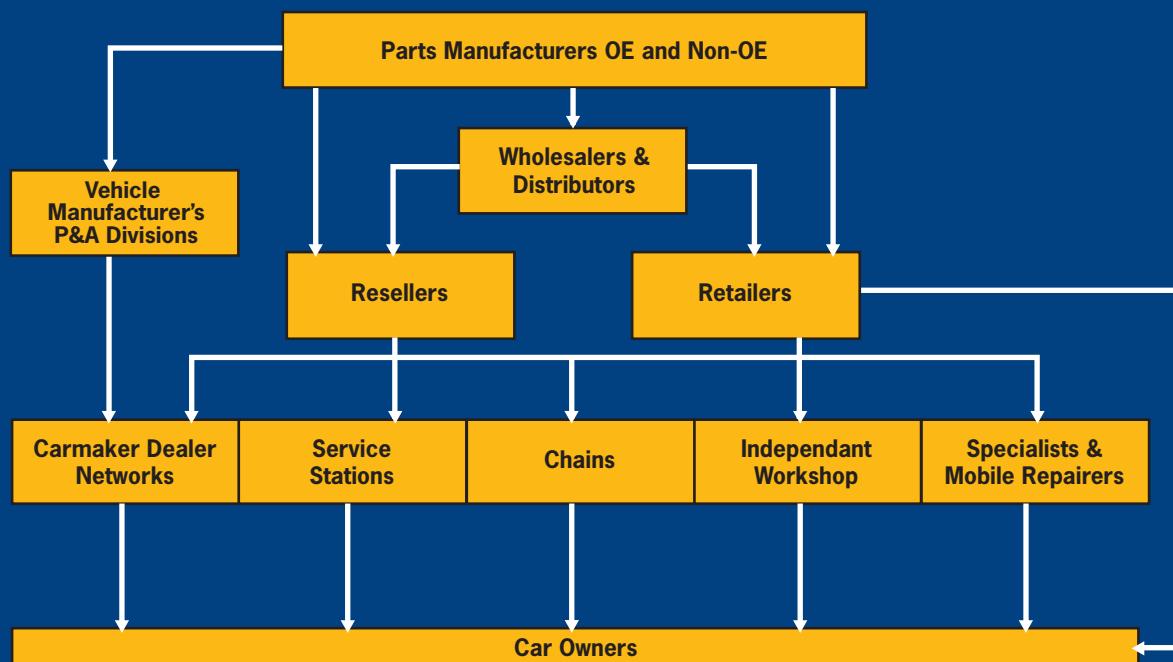

Australia's automotive manufacturers are well known for their flexibility and agility, their ability to handle small volume production runs, their exploitation of niches in the aftermarket and being attuned to the current trends in the aftermarket.

Consider Australia as a source of quality innovative aftermarket parts and accessories, including 4x4 parts and accessories, high performance & motorsport parts and accessories, lamps and lighting, brake components, filters, and suspension products.

Australian automotive aftermarket manufacturers produce a comprehensive range of high quality parts, accessories, tools and equipment for all categories of vehicles. The industry exports over AUD $700 million of equipment annually.

This directory features capability statements and contact information on Australian companies currently exporting their products of the world.
